Cloud Offloaded brings together 13 artists working across sculpture, painting, prints, photography, collage, and mixed media.

In a time when computational systems turn our lives into collectable data, Cloud Offloaded returns to embodied and human experience to consider how identity might be reconfigured through creative acts of remaking.

As personal narratives and reputations become increasingly legible through quantifiable traces, algorithmic systems claim a form of objectivity while often reproducing the social inequalities embedded in the data they rely on.

In response, the exhibition challenges the notion of identity as fixed and measurable. It proposes artistic practice as a space where subjectivity can remain fluid, ambiguous, and resistant to classification.

Across diverse media, the participating artists approach making as a form of ritual and inquiry. Through gestures such as intuitive mark-making, cutting and pasting, layering images, and visual deconstruction, their works reconfigure identity as something continually constructed. Rather than rejecting technology outright, these practices decompose and reinterpret its visual and conceptual language.

Foregrounding emotion, material presence, and lived experience, Cloud Offloaded invites viewers to reconsider dominant narratives about identity and data, opening space for alternative ways of sensing, imagining, and reconstructing reality.
